German village, philanthropic story

In 1873 (Year of Meiji 6), a German merchant ship, Robertson encountered a typhoon and stranded by the shore of Miyakuin. Islanders desperately rescued eight crew members in the rough sea and helped them to return their home. Three years later, a monument was given by the German Emperor to thank the islanders for their philanthropy. Based on this story, the German Culture Village opened in 1996. Springs, wells and underground dams

湧水、井戸と地下ダム

宮古島の地震は、穴だらけで透水性が高い珊瑚石灰岩。島に降った雨は地下に浸透し、不透水の粘土層で横に流れ海に湧出します。水無島だった宮古では、湧水に寄り添うように集落ができました。この地下水脈を止水壁でせき止め、水を汲み上げる仕組みが地下ダムです。1988年着工。大規模な建設は世界初の試みでした。

The strain of Miyako Island is coral limestone with many holes. The rain falls on the island penetrates underground, flows sideways in an impermeable clay layers and springs out into the sea. The island used to have not sufficient water so villages started to form around the natural springs. The underground dam mechanism is to block the groundwater vein with water barriers and pumps up the water. This project was started in 1988, and was the world's first attempt to such a large scale construction.
